CHINA-- WHY STUDY IN CHINA?

With its vast territory, China has a rich and unique ecosystem, species, and genetic diversity due to its complex and diverse landforms and climates. It is one of the top 5 megadiverse countries in the world, with the highest rate of afforestation, around 12% of the world's plant and bird species, and 10% of mammals and fish.

China's traditional culture has manifested a profound understanding of biodiversity. Thoughts and concepts such as "integration of man and nature", "Taoism and nature", and "equality of all things" reflect the simple awareness of biodiversity protection. In recent years, China has made commendable progress in the green fields, with both government investments and citizen awareness rising steadily. Valuable experiences have been accumulated in spatial planning for land use, forest protection and restoration, and species protection. These knowledge and practical experiences could be our contribution to a greater global impact and are worthy of promotion worldwide.
